The Daily Morning Voice Online Desk: Law Minister Anisul Huq today ruled out the possibility of restoration of the caretaker government system in the country. “The Supreme Court has declared the caretaker government system illegal and unconstitutional and accordingly, the constitution has been amended. He was talking to journalists after attending a meeting on the occasion of inaugurating a training course for the subordinate court judges at Judicial Administration Training Institute (JATI) in Dhaka. The law minister said the next national elections will be held under the constitution. The government departments will provide all assistances to the Election Commission during the election period, he said. Replying to question, he said, “Please, do not pay any heed to the rumours about the names of the next president.”
