Online Desk : Prime Minister Tarique Rahman on Tuesday called upon the World Economic Forum (WEF) to take coordinated measures in support of delta nations like Bangladesh, which are highly vulnerable to climate change, as well as countries threatened by rising sea levels. He made the call when WEF President and Chief Executive Officer (CEO) Alois Zwinggi paid a courtesy call on him this afternoon at Dalian International Conference Center on the sidelines of the WEF's annual gathering here.

At the beginning of the meeting, the WEF president and CEO congratulated the Prime Minister on assuming office as the head of government of Bangladesh. Highlighting Bangladesh efforts to address climate change effects, he said they have launched an initiative to plant 25 crore trees over the next five years.

He also highlighted the country's efforts to restore water flow, reduce flood risks, and protect the environment through the re-excavation of nearly 20,000 kilometers of rivers and canals. The premier said as part of efforts to encourage renewable energy production, Bangladesh has introduced tax incentives for solar power generation and adopted a plan to generate 20 percent of its total electricity demand from renewable sources by 2030. Alois Zwinggi expressed interest in utilising Tarique Rahman's experience and initiatives in combating climate change at the global level.

He said Bangladesh's climate resilience and sustainable development initiatives would attract the attention of international financing institutions and investors. Assuring serious consideration of the issues raised by Bangladesh, he pledged that the WEF would continue to provide the necessary support.
