

You'll Never Guess Why Government Officials Are Sinking a Four-Story Riverboat Casino Into the Abyss

July 18, 2026

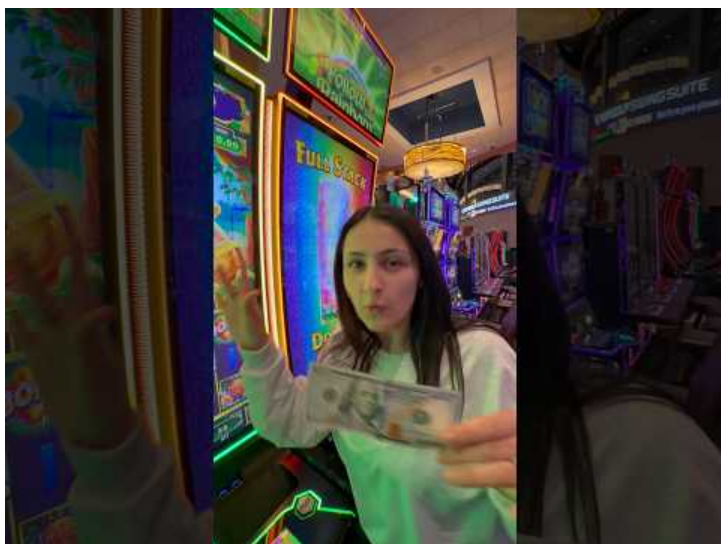

The casino brings in millions of dollars a year as a tourism destination, employer and tax source. Begun in 1953 with the sinking of 250 junk cars, Alabama's world-leading artificial reef system comprises some 1,060 square miles of coastal water. Once considered the world's largest riverboat casino, the Argosy VI is now taking its place as part of the world's largest artificial reef system. According to the Cincinnati Enquirer, the Argosy VI had a maximum capacity of 4,407 people, with room for over 1,700 slot machines, a number rivaling mid-sized land-based casinos. Guests also enjoy access to neighboring Royalton Splash Punta Cana and its extensive water park.

According to the outlet, the Alabama Department of Conservation and Natural Resources purchased the Argosy VI with plans to turn it into an artificial reef. Government officials in Alabama are giving an old riverboat casino a from Indiana a new life — not floating down the state's copious waterways, but at the bottom of the sea.
